

A special newsletter from Lorna Byrne to her American Friends.

October 2010

Dear American Friends,

I don't want any of you to think that with all the talk in recent newsletters about Stairways to Heaven that I have forgotten about those of you in America. I certainly haven't – The angels wouldn't let me forget you as they keep telling me that America is very important, that America is where the choices that will affect mankind will be made, that America is the gateway to humanity's future.

Because of this I can't forget America, busy as I might be on this side of the Atlantic. The angels have told me that before Stairways to Heaven is published in America, more people need to have discovered Angels in my hair. It now looks like the earliest that Stairways to Heaven will be published in the US is the middle of 2011. I very much hope that between now and then more people in America will discover Angels in my hair, and that this will be helped by the publication of a paperback version of Angels in my hair which will be more affordable (We are still talking with the publisher about this so I have no confirmed timing yet).

America is so important. Americans are more open spiritually than any of the European nationalities. America feels different spiritually to me – I try and explain it in this video about Angels in America (4 minutes long) that was filmed in Los Angeles during my US tour this summer. The diversity of America fascinates me; particularly the variety of peoples, religions and races. One day in July, during my American tour, I arrived into Central Station from Upstate New York where I was staying. As we made our way out through a side hall to the street we came across a protest of some sort linked to Tibet. It was quite a small protest and I'm not sure exactly what it was about. There were perhaps 20 protestors carrying large flags surrounding a banner. Among them were two Buddhist monks. Of course, as always I saw the light of their Guardian Angel behind each and every one of them – On this occasion none of them opened up. There were loads of other angels there. There were four angels that were a foot or so taller than the monks but were dressed in similar type of robes. The angel's robes shimmered. I didn't see any wings. Their heads were bent in prayer and in their hands were prayer beads. I could hear the ceaseless hum of their prayer about the hustle and bustle of the station. I know they were there praying in support of the protestors message. These angels were prayer angels and I see them in places where people gather to pray. This may not have been a prayer service, but the monks there were supporting the cause of the protestors with their prayers.

There was about a dozen of what I call white angels milling around the protestors helping too. It was as if they were filling out the crowd and attracting the attention of passersby, making them stop, even for a moment and take notice of what was going on. Some of the angels walked towards the passersby and spectators, helping them to understand the protest, and managed to induce some of them to come back and listen, to come back and have a look at what was going on. At times it was as if the angels were helping the flags to wave, so as they would be noticed, or lighting up the banner, so as people would stop and read it. As I have said before Americans are more open than most nationalities so this way of getting attention was quite effective.

We only stopped for a moment before we went out into the busy street to go to my interview. Two hours later we left the Ace Hotel after my interview. In confusion we turned left instead of right – the angels sometimes do this to me when they want me to see something. At the corner we realized we had gone the wrong way and retraced our steps down the street on the opposite side of the road. As we walked I noticed a large dark skinned man sitting on steps up to a door, in his hands he had prayer beads. The light of his Guardian Angel opened up. He was enormous, standing right behind him, giving a strong masculine appearance and was a silver and white color. It was as if the angel radiated love and compassion. The man was in the depths of prayer. The angel communicated to me without words that he was praying for peace. As the angel said this the footpath in front of us lit up. I was a bit confused; I didn't understand what was going on. We kept walking, but everything seemed to go into slow motion. I saw piles of shoes, and was even more confused. I wondered if it was a shoe shop, but then realized the shoes were very old. I kept looking around, but I still didn't understand what was going on. I saw men standing on the side of the busy road. As one man put his blanket down on the ground and prostrated himself I realized what I was seeing. They were Muslims at prayer. I turned to the right and in the basement room I saw perhaps a hundred men prostrate on the ground. There were hundreds of angels of prayer with them. I could feel my own soul at prayer, everything in the room seemed to glow. I knew it was from the prayer angels streaming up to heaven with a never ending stream of prayers. I was so overwhelmed and excited about what I saw and felt. I joined them in prayer unknown to them. I long for the day when all religions pray together.

Later that day again we found ourselves in a small courtyard; an oasis of peace amid the towering buildings of Manhattan. It was attached to a Catholic Church, but I know workers for all around that area, of all religions used it as a haven. As I walked around on my own, an angel took my hand. I couldn't see its face clearly. The angel told me to pray as I was walked around and to feel all the blessings; prayers that had been said in that place and answered. The angel told me to sit down. As I did I prayed for everyone who prayed there. A workman in his forties came in and sat down at another bench. I knew he was praying because he was surrounded by prayer angels. He was praying from the depth of his heart. He was still praying as I moved into have a look at the church.

Prayer angels are of course not unique to America – I see them everywhere. They are there each time every one of us prays or asks for God help in every way. This is one of the reasons that we should never underestimate the power of prayer.

What was wonderful for me, this day in New York, was to see so many prayer angels with people of different religions over the space of a few hours. I would never see this in Ireland. The diversity of religion in America is part of what makes it such a special place. It is vital for the evolution of mankind that this religious diversity is respected and encouraged.

This is of course one of the important message in Angels in my hair. Another message which is he resonating very strongly with people is that they are never alone, that regardless of their religious beliefs – or lack of them - they have a guardian angel by their side who never leaves them, not even for a moment. When I wrote Angels in my hair I said that if it helped one person I would be satisfied. I can't believe how many people it has helped, I get letters from people all over the world saying that this book has made a big difference to their lives.

I need your help in spreading the word of Angels in my hair in the USA. In particular I need your help to make sure the 1000 seat venue that the Open Center in New York have booked for me to speak in on the 3rd

December is sold out. I'm told tickets are selling fast so click here to book. <http://www.opencenter.org/?m=20101203&cat=4> This is my only speaking event planned for the US over the next four to five months.

God and his angels keep sending me human helpers, for which I am very grateful. One of these is Jennifer in Texas, a wonderful communications expert who listened to her angel, and offered to help in spreading the word in the USA. Jennifer has some ideas of how you might help and has offered to co-ordinate things in the US. Have a look at the message from her below.

Thank you in advance for playing your part.

God bless

Lorna
